Betsy Landers, National PTA, immediate past President
In 2010, Tennessee adopted the common core standards. These standards are based on research that will better prepare students for college and careers. Tennessee began phasing in the standards for math and English during the 2011-2012 school year. Currently, grades K-12 are using the math and English standards. Betsy Landers, Past President of the National PTA and Germantown resident has gained invaluable knowledge about the common core standards from her years serving public education through the PTA at the local, county, state and national levels. With Germantown preparing for its own municipal school district, parents, teachers, PTA leaders and the general population need to be informed about the common core debate. Come listen as she outlines the pros and cons of the common core initiative and answers your questions about it as time allows.
